17 to 4 : the meeting being Messrs. Dibbs, Driver, W. C. Brown, and Philbrick.

The CHAIRMAN left the chair, reported progress, and then left to sing again.

Attention was called to the state of the House, and a quorum was formed.

Several orders of the day having been postponed.

Attention again called to the state of the House, and that not being a quorum present, the House was adjourned.

At 10.30 a.m. yesterday in the debate on Mr. R. B. Smith's motion for adjournment the remarks of Mr. R. B. Smith were inadvertently attributed to Mr. W. C. Brown.

THE EARL OF SHAFESBURY AT HOME.

(From the World, December 20.)

THE very tall man with gray hair and whiskers, who points to the village stocks of Wimborne St. Giles with a walking stick of enormous bulk, is the lord of the soil from the centre of the earth to the heaven above, including all the messengers and tenements theron and therein. He wears a rough suit of gray tweed; his pantaloons are turned up at the bottom; his hat is of the familiar bowler type. His tremendous height and the unmistakable A-holey nose reveal the landed proprietor and philanthropist, who during his valuable career has earned the applause of the great North as well as that of easy-going Wessex. He explains that the village stocks have recently been repaired "not as a menace" to the very well-behaved villagers of Wimborne St. Giles, but rather out of tenderness to a venerable relic of the barbarous usages of our forefathers, who in their zeal to punish the drunkenness of others heeded little the addition of shame to discomfit. The ancient stocks, like "bruised arms hung up for monuments," may be understood to point a moral, and to record the change that has come over Dorsetshire, or at least parts of it, within the last half-century. In the good old times the labourer had his six shillings a week, his parish relief, and the stocks if he got drunk, although the achievement of the latter feat must have been difficult under the circumstances. At present he has fourteen or sixteen shillings a week, still the hideous resort of punishment, but no dread of the stocks, less necessary than of old; for increased wages have in the case of the agriculturist brought no increase of intoxication.

On these and many other topics does Lord Shaftesbury enlarge, as he leads the way round the model village, nestled close under the house and church of St. Giles. It is verily a model village. Thatch—beautiful in a picture, but a bad sign in fact—has nearly disappeared, and wattle-and-daub has been completely replaced by brick. Here and there is a venerable cot, like that which on destruction was found to have received twelve coats of thatch, as infallible a sign of two hundred and twenty-four years life as the rings in a tree-trunk; but the old type has almost entirely vanished, and the new labourer's cottage, spick and span, brick-built, slate-roofed, and soundly constructed, has taken its place. These new cottages, in which Lord Shaftesbury takes great pride, are built in pairs. Each one contains its front parlour and back kitchen on the ground floor, above which are three bedrooms, absolutely unconnected with each other, and having independent doors opening on to the common landing the landlord, still energetically wielding his mighty walking-stick, points out with a quiet laugh that the long strip of garden with which each cottage is endowed is "in front." Lord Shaftesbury has no opinion of back gardens; "public opinion cannot be brought to bear upon them, and they degenerate into dens." The houses "you will observe, face the south; it saves a large percentage of fuel during the mild winters of Dorsetshire, and ripens the apricots as well." Every cottage has its apricot tree; and the example of these trees would bear no slight resemblance to a certain sacred narrative. Some are fair and well grown, bringing forth fruit abundantly; others cling hopelessly to the walls, stunted and fruitless. Each cottage has also its pump, or rather half a pump, for there is one between two—in separate sanitary arrangements, its independent pigsty, and individual allotment of a quarter of an acre. For these accommodations—which, excluding the cost of the land, stand the proprietor in one hundred and sixty pounds per holding—the "down-trodden Dorsetshire labourer" pays exactly fifty-two shillings per annum; a fact which will explain the meaning of many landlords, who, when their farmers cry out for cottages, offer to build as many as they like, if they will guarantee five per cent. on the capital invested. The owner of Wimborne St. Giles tells us that his labourers always pay their rent. Good times and bad, he gets his one and a half per cent. well and duly paid; for there is sharp competition for his cottages, and the one bit of foresight shown by the Wimborne husbandman is to keep a roof over his head.

One great source of village demoralisation is poaching. "My woods are very large and not overstocked with game," their owner remarks; "I do not think it would pay a regular poacher to stop out all night for what he could pick up there. I preserve very little, on the principle that it is unfair to place an irresistible temptation before my people. It is unfair, and it is ridiculous too," he adds, as his blue eyes put on a laughing look, "to tell a poor ignorant fellow to work hard all day for half-a-crown when he can earn ten shillings and more in two or three hours of the night in a well-stocked preserve. Poaching has never been considered stealing in this part of the country, and the people take to it as naturally as did the old hereditary deer-stealers of Cranborne Chase; but it is not worth their while to trouble me."

Discouraging thus we arrive at a row of almshouses, and our tall host bows his head low as we enter one tenanted by an ancient dame, rejoicing in numerous teapots. True to the instinct of her class, she overwhelms "my lord" with a long list of her ailments and sufferings, especially from a cold "that dreadful beast," &c., till the good-natured peer, his patience finally exhausted, says, sympathetically, "I have got a cold too," and executes a skilful flane movement towards the door. Escaping into the outer air we strike along towards the village church, where lies buried a noteworthy ancestor of the Ashley-Coopers, Sir Anthony Ashley, Secretary at War in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, the first grower of cabbages in England. It is odd to reflect that the "great shins of beef" which nourished the warriors of Crewe, Agincourt, Barnet, Bosworth, and Flodden were eaten without carrots; that skinny mutton was favoured not long ago without potatoes; that the Saxon husbandman ate his pork without cabbage; but the fact remains that vegetables and good beef are modern inventions. Passing by two yew trees of enormous girth we reach the quaint kitchen garden, divided by an ancient wall into four quadrangles, originally used as paddocks for raising herds. At the gate of the kitchen garden waits, with a light load of gravel behind him, "Coster," the famous donkey presented to Lord Shaftesbury by the costermongers of London. Coster is only worked two days a week, to keep him in condition, his tendency being towards overrobustness. He is fair and full of flesh; his neck is clothed in thunder; the grey curl over his broad forehead give him a strangely judicial air. But his gravity only lasts during his hours of exercise, for out of the shafts he is as gay as a kitten. He is, it is needless to say, much loved and petted by the dwellers at St. Giles's House. Lord Shaftesbury stops a while to caress Coster, pats his curly pate, and spans his neck, massive as that of Blair Athol himself. "The donkey," says the Lord-lieutenant of Dorsetshire, "is the most patient, affectionate, frugal, and docile of animals." It is not the donkey who is stupid, but the people who will not learn to understand him, and treat him according to his nature." Donkeys, it seems, can get over their twenty or thirty miles for six days in the week, and with a day's rest on Sunday come out fresh and well on Monday to repeat the feat.

The house itself is one of those curious specimens of development which abound in England, and suggest the process by which great families, as well as great houses, are formed. At some remote period it was undoubtedly a fortified stronghold, the great central hall being obviously a courtyard glazed over. Centuries ago the little river, once bent bitherward to supply the moat, was carried under the house and now expands into a pretty lake. "Mistletoe," says the Lord of St. Giles's, "may grow on the oak, according to popular belief, in some places, but it never does here. Our crop of mistletoe is very large, and we have oaks in abundance, but we never get a berry from an oaktree." St. Giles's is a storehouse of pictures and rare furniture, the wealth in "Chippendales" alone being immense. There are ceilings and chimney-pieces by Inigo Jones, and portraits valuable, not only as pictures, but as historic memorials. Among these are several fine specimens of Sir Joshua; Sir Peter Lely's portrait of Sara Jennings, Duchess of Marlborough, obtained from the descendants of the Subject Channing to whom it was given by the volcanic duchess; a portrait of the first Earl of Shaftesbury, Dryden's Archetype, as Lord Chancellor of England, clad in ash-coloured robes, because he had never been called to the bar; and of his son, a handsome youth, much maligned by the poet.

In the library hangs a curious picture of John Milton, as a young man, by Cornelius Jansens, and a drawing in crayon of Handel by the grandmother of the present Earl. Handel may be called the illustrious shade which haunts St. Giles's House. Other great mansions and some small ones, like the fine old manor-house at Cranborne, preserve the memory of a long line of royal visitors; but the descendants of "Achitophel" treasure the memory of the illustrious musician whose rooms at St. Giles's still bear his name. Scattered through the various great rooms are many curious memorials of the past, notably Snyder's picture of a porcupine engaged in the apocalyptic operation of shooting his quills at his assailants. The porcupine, magnificently painted, occupies the centre of the picture. He has just shot one dog, who, transfixed with a quill, is bleeding apes and howling with agony, and he is evidently taking aim at dog No. 2, who is contemplating the fate of his companion with deep concern. There is also a valuable picture of the foundation of the colony of Georgia, in which the fifth earl took part, and a singular portrait of the wicked old Hastings, who supplied one of the immortal "characters." One snug room, rich in tapestry, is hung round with the fashion-plates of bygone times, dressed in samples of the real stuff, put on by some process like that of "tinselling" of stage-characters which most middle-aged men can recollect as a pleasant excuse for upsetting pots of gum and making a mess generally. St. Giles's House also boasts a dining-room of which the owner is especially proud, as being so admirably proportioned that forty guests will not crowd, nor ten look sparse in it—a splendid room the full height of the building, like the great hall, noticeable for a monument to which the owner can hardly point without emotion. It is the colossal bust of himself, carved out of one vast block of marble, and presented to the late Lord Shaftesbury by the working people of the North as a memorial of the noble work performed in their cause by her husband.

THE DISEASES THAT KILL.

(From the Times.)

THE Registrar-General shows in the report which he has issued on the year 1874, that two-thirds of the deaths in England occurred from one or other of 16 causes. Bronchitis heads the list; it caused 53,022 deaths, a larger number than in any year included in a table extending over the preceding 15 years. Next comes phthisis, or consumption, which cut short 49,370 lives, a smaller number than in almost any of the preceding 15 years. Atrophy and debility account for 30,993 deaths, chiefly of young children. Old age, which should be highest on the list of causes of death, is fourth, and to it 28,604 deaths are referred. The list includes 12,495 men and 16,109 women, all over 65 years old, and some centenarians. Heart disease, which continues to increase, accounts for 28,518 deaths; and convulsions caused 27,189, almost all of them deaths of children. Pneumonia, more fatal than for some few years, occasioned 24,927 deaths. Eighth on the list stands scarlet fever, to which as many as 24,922 deaths are attributed; an epidemic of scarlet fever had set in, and this number is nearly double that of either of the two next preceding years. Diphtheria, which is more fatal than it was twenty years ago, caused 21,304 deaths, more than 18,100 of them occurring among children under five years of age. Dr. W. Farr thinks it not improbable that the mixture of sewage in water tends to spread this disease among children. Apxopexy and paralysis, both of them on the increase of late years, caused 18,948 and 18,672 deaths respectively in 1874; but diseases of the nervous system did not show so great an increase in that year as diseases of the organs of circulation. Measles was more fatal than on the average; it was the cause of 12,265 deaths. Cancer, one of the longest most painful diseases to which mankind are subject, is growing more fatal, and as many as 11,011 deaths were ascribed to it in 1874, comprising 3,470 males and 7,541 females. Cancer spares the young; most of the deaths occur at ages above 45, and it is noticeable in the year's returns that under that age the deaths of males were more numerous than those of females, but at ages over 45 there were registered 2,901 deaths of males, and no less than 7,114 deaths of females. Dr. Farr's comment is that "forces which had been expended in building up normal organizations were then diverted towards heterologous structures." Last on the list of the 15 chief foes of life come premature birth, which in 1874 accounted for 10,287 deaths, and whooping-cough 10,392 deaths. The rate of mortality in the year from all causes was not above the average, but it was higher than that of the preceding year; nearly half the excess was attributable to scarlet fever and measles, while atmospheric and other agencies raised the deaths from many causes. In reviewing the causes of death, Dr. Farr remarks that tubercular diseases show signs of subidence. Typhus and simple continued fever are noticed as having shown a tendency to decline since three forms of fever have been distinguished in the returns, but enteric fever showed no symptom of decline. Gout still holds its own. The death-rate from alcoholism was higher in 1874 than it had been for some years. Hydrophobia, notwithstanding police regulations, is twice as fatal as it was twenty years ago; there were 61 deaths from this cause in 1874. The violent deaths were 17,910, the highest number yet registered. Nearly all were from accident or negligence, but the executions reached the unusual number of 18, and there were 1,692 suicides. There were 1,249 persons killed on railways in the year in some way or other. The year's returns show 1,313 persons killed by horse conveyances; tramcars killed 62, omnibuses only 55 persons. By cars 61 persons were killed, and by carriages 82, and this limitation of the numbers is noted as implying great skill on the part of the drivers in streets often crowded. There were 942 deaths from injuries in coal mines, and 118 from injuries connected with copper, tin, iron, and other mines. Deaths by poisoning increased to 461, about a third of them being ascertained suicides. There were 25 boys and men, nearly all following outdoor occupations, killed by lightning. Sunstroke was fatal to 90 persons, and 114 deaths were ascribed to gelatio and exposure to cold. A girl only 14 years old, daughter of a labourer, died in childbirth. There was a death from the bite of a fox, from the bite of a rat, from the scratch of a cat, from the bite of a leech, from the sting of a hornet, and two from stings of wasps. Thus by one way or another more than half a million persons closed their lives in England in the year.

EARLDOMS.

(From the Full Bell Gazette.)

Lord Redesdale's promotion may suggest some reflections on the composition of the order in the Peerage to which he will henceforth belong. Though an earlom is the most ancient of English titles of nobility, the senior existing earlom of England not merged in a higher title dates only from the reign of Henry VI.; and Lord Shaftesbury has a precedence of 43 years over Lord Derby, the second earl on the roll of peers, whose ancestor was raised to the rank which his descendant now enjoys by Henry VII. The third earlom, Huntingdon, was created by Henry VIII.; the fourth, Pembroke, by the Government of Edward VI.; the fifth, Devon, by Queen Mary; the next three—Suffolk, Denbigh, and Westmoreland—by James I.; the next four—Lindsey, Stamford, Winchelsea, and Chesterfield—by Charles I.; the next seven—Sandwich, Essex, Carlisle, Doncaster (the title by which the Duke of Buccleuch sits in the House), Shaftesbury, Berkley, and Abingdon—by Charles II.; the next four—Scarborough, Albermarle, Coventry, and Jersey—by William III.; while the last surviving earlom in the Peerage of England not merged in a higher title is that of Poulett, which dates from the reign of Queen Anne. The remaining earls in the House of Lords are, of course, either "of Great Britain" or "of the United Kingdom," or representative peers for Scotland or Ireland. Several dukes and marquises, however, hold earloms of early creation. Thus the Duke of Norfolk is Earl of Arundel, and premier earl, the Duke of Beaufort is Earl of Worcester (1514), and the Duke of Rutland is descended from Thomas Manners, 13th Lord de Ros, created Earl of Rutland in 1525. This peer, by the way, made a pun in dog No. 2, who is contemplating the fate of his companion with deep concern. There is also a valuable picture of the foundation of the colony of Georgia, in which the fifth earl took part, and a singular portrait of the wicked old Hastings, who supplied one of the immortal "characters." One snug room, rich in tapestry, is hung round with the fashion-plates of bygone times, dressed in samples of the real stuff, put on by some process like that of "tinselling" of stage-characters which most middle-aged men can recollect as a pleasant excuse for upsetting pots of gum and making a mess generally. It is the colossal bust of himself, carved out of one vast block of marble, and presented to the late Lord Shaftesbury by the working people of the North as a memorial of the noble work performed in their cause by her husband.

THROUGHOUT the year 1874, two-thirds of the deaths in England occurred from one or other of 16 causes. Bronchitis heads the list; it caused 53,022 deaths, a larger number than in any year included in a table extending over the preceding 15 years. Measles was more fatal than on the average; it was the cause of 12,265 deaths. Cancer, one of the longest most painful diseases to which mankind are subject, is growing more fatal, and as many as 11,011 deaths were ascribed to it in 1874, comprising 3,470 males and 7,541 females. Cancer spares the young; most of the deaths occur at ages above 45, and it is noticeable in the year's returns that under that age the deaths of males were more numerous than those of females, but at ages over 45 there were registered 2,901 deaths of males, and no less than 7,114 deaths of females. Dr. Farr's comment is that "forces which had been expended in building up normal organizations were then diverted towards heterologous structures." Last on the list of the 15 chief foes of life come premature birth, which in 1874 accounted for 10,287 deaths, and whooping-cough 10,392 deaths. The rate of mortality in the year from all causes was not above the average, but it was higher than that of the preceding year; nearly half the excess was attributable to scarlet fever and measles, while atmospheric and other agencies raised the deaths from many causes. In reviewing the causes of death, Dr. Farr remarks that tubercular diseases show signs of subidence. Typhus and simple continued fever are noticed as having shown a tendency to decline since three forms of fever have been distinguished in the returns, but enteric fever showed no symptom of decline. Gout still holds its own. The death-rate from alcoholism was higher in 1874 than it had been for some years. Hydrophobia, notwithstanding police regulations, is twice as fatal as it was twenty years ago; there were 61 deaths from this cause in 1874. The violent deaths were 17,910, the highest number yet registered. Nearly all were from accident or negligence, but the executions reached the unusual number of 18, and there were 1,692 suicides. There were 25 boys and men, nearly all following outdoor occupations, killed by lightning. Sunstroke was fatal to 90 persons, and 114 deaths were ascribed to gelatio and exposure to cold. A girl only 14 years old, daughter of a labourer, died in childbirth. There was a death from the bite of a fox, from the bite of a rat, from the scratch of a cat, from the bite of a leech, from the sting of a hornet, and two from stings of wasps. Thus by one way or another more than half a million persons closed their lives in England in the year.

ordinary in our legal annals. Philip Yorke, the son of a solicitor of respectability at Dover, was called to the Bar in 1715 at the age of 24, and in 1721 was made Solicitor-General. Four years later he became Attorney-General, and in 1733, before he had completed the 43rd year of his age, Lord Chief Justice of England and a peer of the realm as Lord Hardwicke. A little more than three years placed him on the woolsack, where he sat comfortably for some 19 years, being further raised during his tenure of office to an earldom. It must be remembered, too, that the office of Chancellor was then the over-burden of Napoleon's rule. They were suppressed by Fouche, who was so completely master of the situation that he could tell, "You will cease to reign." The Philadelphians were powerless against Napoleon and they, too, passed away without a sign, though no doubt when the Emperor fell by the force of others, and other circumstances, they cried out, "There he lies, and we have worked his ruin." The Tugendbund was of a very different stamp. It was a national, patriotic, and open association, first banded to overthrow French rule, and afterwards to secure Constitutional Government for Germany. The German Association, regarded as the chief centre of hostility to the reigning dynasty, was believed to be active; and the extraordinary "paper-man" mania which spread over Central China, was attributed to the machinations of certain of these conspirators, with a view to embarrass the officials and create excitement and alarm which would facilitate their own operations if the occasion came. They succeeded in creating a panic which, perhaps from its very intensity, worked its own cure. People were first of all alarmed by the story of their queen's death, and then round the world in some parts of Germany paper-men were employed to cut off the tails of the lieges, and that those who suffered this loss were sure to be taken ill and die within a given period. The political import seems to have been the removal of the badge of subjection to the Tartar, but the common people saw only the necromancy and the portent, and were alarmed in proportion to the absurdity of the superstition. But this gave place to a still more intense terror. The paper-spirits were next created with descending on them the name of Devils, and the Devils black-clad ones got somehow mixed up with paper-men in the transaction, and while the latter were credited with the necromantic effect, black-clad were the active agents in producing the suffocation. The panic was most intense at Soochow and Woosu, where people were actually afraid to go to bed at night, and work was some days practically suspended. They slept by day and boat gongs at night to drive away the threatening meibei. The Governor of Chekiang deserves credit for the most sensible proclamation which we have seen issue from a mandarin. He told his troops to be on the alert, but not to be frightened at a nightmare, and not to listen to such gossip. The panic subsided nearly as rapidly as it had arisen, and, since the peaceful termination of the Yunnan difficulty, seems to have disappeared as mysteriously as it had arisen. It is difficult not to connect the two incidents; and the knowledge that the outbreak of a foreign war would have been a certain signal for insurrection, lends political importance to what might otherwise be passed by as a rank explosion of superstition.

In some districts the excitement was turned against foreign subjects, and the meibei who were accused of introducing and commanding the paper-men who were tormenting the minds and bodies of the people. Notably in Anhwei, a violent persecution was raised throughout an extensive district; mission premises were burned, several Christians were killed, and the Roman missionaries had to flee the province. At the instance of the French Minister, the Viceroy of Nanking eventually deputed officials to visit the disturbed districts and restore order, and agreed to make reparation for the property destroyed by the meibei. Szechuan also, the converts of the Roman missionaries in the neighbourhood of Chingking, were subjected to severe and prolonged persecutions, which, however, in their case, had another origin. The literati are accused of having directly instigated them, inspired by a document professing to emanate from the Literary Chancellor of the province, which breathed intense hostility to foreigners and advocated war and extirmination of the hated intruders. Numbers of lives were sacrificed and much property was destroyed during the riots which followed; but we have heard nothing for some months of further disturbance, so presume that order has been restored; a steady editor of the Pheng Gazette has directed the Provincial Authorities who had hitherto been supine, to do their duty.

While these things were going on in the Northwest, in Central China the provinces of Kiangsu and Shantung, and in a less degree that of Chihli, were being suffered from famine following upon a drought which caused the failure of the crop and consequent impoverishment and scarcity. Some measures of relief are being taken, but the want of good roads makes the carriage of rice to the distressed districts difficult, and it is to be regretted that the Chinese Government does not require the people to earn food by developing the means of communication. The meibei also, contributing for the relief of the distressed people, and the funds are being usefully distributed through the local Protestant missionaries, who are said in some cases to have been given money even by Chinese, who trust to their honesty and object to have their contributions taken toll of by official underlings.

SYDNEY INFIRMARY AND DISPENSARY.—

The Annual General MEETING of the Subscribers to this institution will be held in St. James's Schoolroom, Castlereagh-street, on the evening of MONDAY, 26th instant, at 8 o'clock.

BUSINESS:

The Directors' Report and Treasurer's Account for the past year to be submitted.

Vacancies in the Executive and Honorary Medical Staff to be filled, and the election of such other business as may be brought before the meeting.

The attendance of Governors and Subscribers is respectfully invited.

H. D. RUSSELL, Secretary.

TO THE GOVERNORS AND SUBSCRIBERS TO THE SYDNEY INFIRMARY.—LADIES AND GENTLEMEN, I beg to announce myself as a CANDIDATE for the honorary Superintendence, and earnestly solicit your votes and influence.

I have the honour to be, yours faithfully,

THOMAS SCOTT.

Member of the Royal College of Surgeons, England; Licentiate of the Royal College of Physicians, Edinburgh; Fellow of the Royal Society and SPECIAL CERTIFICATE OF MERIT from the Rotunda, Livingstone, Dublin.

TO THE DIRECTORS AND SUBSCRIBERS TO THE SYDNEY INFIRMARY.

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN, I beg to offer myself as a candidate for the honorary Superintendence, and earnestly solicit your votes and influence.

My professional studies were chiefly carried on during my time at King's College, Cambridge, London, and in Edinburgh University, at which seats of education I took honours in several subjects. During my career I have had the advantage of acting as assistant in public and private practice to Sir William Fergusson, Bart., Surgeon to the Royal Hospital, and to the late Dr. J. G. Balfour, and to several other surgeons of European celebrity.

I have enjoyed opportunities for studying the practical part of my profession by actual residence in King's College Hospital and the Royal London Ophthalmic Hospital, Moorfields; have studied the diseases of women in the Rotunda Hospital, Dublin; and have also followed the work of eminent surgeons in St. Peter's, Petersburgh, and in Paris.

During the past twenty years I have been continuously engaged as Medical Tutor, in hospital and private practice; and in the course of my career have, from time to time, made important research work which has been productive of important results to medical and surgical science, and to the public welfare.

The account of my investigations into the properties of the Broth of Potassium, Ammonium, and Calcium, read in the Royal Society of Medicine, 1st July, 1866, revealed the value of these drugs to the Royal Eye Hospital.

My systematic visitation of the Cholera Hospitals of Constanti and St. Petersburg during the last epidemic (the report of which was published in England, at the instance of the Medical Department of the Privy Council) made important contributions to the treatment of the disease, and to the management of similar epidemics.

Before the Cottage Hospital system was introduced in England I was engaged in the same work; and at my suggestion the second (and one of the most successful) was founded.

I trust the credit of the introduction of the Ether Spray for the purpose of alleviating the pain of surgical operations is justly due to my distinguished friend Dr. Richardson, it was devised by myself contemporaneously, in entire ignorance of the experiments of, and before my acquaintance with, that gentleman.

I mention these facts (to which could be added several others of nearly equal interest) simply to indicate what might be expected. Opportunities for study and usefulness offered in an institution so important as the Sydney Infirmary were, however, to the off.

I should earnestly endeavour to uphold the present character of the institution, to promote its utility, and to fulfil all the duties of the position to the utmost of my ability.

I am the more anxious to obtain the honour at your present disposal, and shall the highly appreciate the support which you will be pleased to give to my efforts, in the conviction that the recent renovations and additions, secured by the zeal and judgment of the directors and the liberality of the public, have now placed the institution in a condition which offers the prospect of a bright future for the alleviation of suffering and the promotion of the medical and surgical interests in the colony.

I have the honour to be,

Ladies and Gentlemen.

Yours most faithfully,

THOMAS B. BELGRAVE, 6, Lyons-terrace, M.D. of the University of Edinburgh.

Member of the College of Surgeons of England, Licentiate of the Society of Apothecaries of London, and Member of various Scientific Societies in St. Petersburg, London, and Edinburgh.
